Harper's BAZAAR

CULTURE

The culture list: what to experience and enjoy in October

The new restaurant openings, absorbing art exhibitions and exciting film releases this enjoy this month

BY HARPER'S BAZAAR UK

Now that autumn is in full swing, with it comes the desire to curl up on the sofa under a blanket with a great new show. So, might we suggest the much-anticipated second season of Nobody Wants This, which returns on 23 October? Or perhaps you may prefer to while away the afternoon at an engrossing exhibition, such as a dazzling retrospective of the war photographer Lee Miller at Tate Britain or the iconic Cecil Beaton at the National Portrait Gallery. A rainy day may also call for an escape to the cinema, in which case, opt for the new Yorgos Lanthimos film, Bugonia, starring Emma Stone and Jesse Plemons.

Thinking of dining out this month? Why not try the fabulous Greek restaurant, Vori, or the sinful martini flights at The Wolseley. Cosy at home? Try your hand at any number of fantastic dishes thanks to the new recipe book from Amelia Christie-Miller.

For a perfect October, simply follow our top recommendations below...

Lose yourself in an enchanting new exhibition

ANDREW CRANSTON

Arriving in Bath this month, fresh from a stint in Orkney, Dreams of the Everyday pairs still-life works by contemporary artist Andrew Cranston with those of Winifred Nicholson. Both painters use colour instinctively and address the immanence to be found in quotidian domestic scenes and objects, and the juxtaposition between them is pleasing. Augustus John said, with foresight, that in a hundred years time he would be remembered as Gwen John's brother, and Cranston perceives a similar tilting in favour of Winifred over her illustrious husband Ben. Cranston's own star is very much in the ascendant, too. Camilla Redmond.

Dreams of the Everyday is at the Holburne Museum, Bath, from October 2.