

WINSTON ROETH

At first glance Roeth's painted panels of pigment on slate appear as simple flat panes of colour – but as you move around them, as the light shifts and changes, they come alive. They are exquisitely painted and reveal their secrets slowly: quiet combinations that play gentle tricks on the eye – simultaneously drawing the viewer into dense voids and bouncing the gaze back with vibrant intensity. Roeth's compositions are distilled through the most minimal ingredients. In a world so accustomed to instant gratification Winston Roeth's paintings require and reward an unusual level of contemplation.

Roeth (who is based in Beacon, New York State) has been described as "...probably the best color painter in New York" by American critic Michael Brennan. He has exhibited extensively and his work is in many important collections, including the Kunstmuseum Basel; the Fogg Art Museum (Harvard); the San Jose Museum of Contemporary Art and the celebrated Panza Collection where his paintings form a site-specific installation in one of the gilded and panelled rooms of the C17th Palazzo Ducale di Sassuolo in Varese, Italy.
