

ANDREW CRANSTON

Cranston is a storyteller of sorts, without a clear story to tell. His work is seductive in terms of its use of narrative and humour, but it is the humour of Samuel Beckett or Buster Keaton, always touching on the strangeness and pathos of ordinary life. He draws on a variety of sources, in particular his own personal history; questioning the veracity of memory. This autobiographical activity is combined with passages culled from literature, anecdotes and jokes, second hand accounts, images from cinema and observations of life. Often working directly onto hardback book covers his work is not pre-conceived but emerges through the manipulation of materials - paint, varnish, collage - and the suggestions that this activity provokes, layering and reworking the images until something essential coalesces. As Liza Dimbleby has written in a recent essay "the images that are encouraged to surface are sometimes taboo; sex and solitude, death, nightmares – the ultimate questions, not without a sly humour."

But the dream had no sound, was presented at Ingleby in the autumn of 2018, was accompanied by the publication of a new book, with interview between the artist and long time colleague, painter Peter Doig. Waiting for the Bell, a major solo exhibition presented by Karma, New York, in 2021 was also accompanied by a major catalogue with essays by Stephanie Burt and Barry Schwabsky.

Cranston was born in Hawick in 1969 and currently lives and works in Glasgow.
